Some questions will require you to recall your previous knowledge. For example, a passage on the critique of Euthanasia may or may not mention the Aruna Shanbaug case. But it may be asked in the questions that follow. This is because, as a graduate in law, you are expected to have previous knowledge of this landmark judgement.

Many a times, in just the fear of scoring scoring less marks, CLAT aspirants over attempt the paper. The result? You end up losing even more marks.

CLAT, as an exam, carries negative marking. Over attempting even a single question can cost you dearly. Making an educated guess is different, but attempting a question just for the sake of it is simply foolish.
