PASSAGE

The Indian Contract Act, 1872, provides the legal framework for the formation, execution, and enforcement of contracts in India. The Act is divided into two parts: Part I deals with general principles relating to the law of contracts (Sections 1 to 75), and Part II deals with special kinds of contracts such as contracts of indemnity, guarantee, bailment, pledge, and agency.

According to Section 2(h) of the Act, a contract is defined as “an agreement enforceable by law.” This implies that not all agreements are contracts unless they fulfill certain legal conditions. These conditions include a lawful offer and acceptance, lawful consideration, capacity of parties, free consent, and lawful object. If any of these essentials are absent, the agreement is either void or voidable, depending on the nature of the defect.

The principle of free consent, enshrined in Section 14, is fundamental to contract formation. Consent is considered free when it is not obtained through coercion (Section 15), undue influence (Section 16), fraud (Section 17), misrepresentation (Section 18), or mistake (Sections 20–22). If consent is not free, the contract becomes voidable at the option of the aggrieved party.

Further, the Act distinguishes between void, voidable, and illegal contracts. A void contract has no legal effect and cannot be enforced by law. A voidable contract is one which is enforceable by law at the option of one of the parties. An illegal contract is not only void but also punishable and opposed to public policy.

The Act also addresses performance, discharge, and breach of contract. In the event of breach, remedies such as damages, specific performance, and injunctions may be granted by the courts. The doctrine of quantum meruit also applies in some circumstances, where a party may recover reasonable remuneration for the part of work done.
