Lessor and Lessee

A lessor is a party who grants the right to use or occupy property to another party in exchange for rent or other consideration. A lessee is a party who acquires the right to use or occupy property from a lessor in exchange for rent or other consideration. The lessor and lessee relationship is governed by the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and the terms and conditions of the lease agreement. Both parties have rights and responsibilities, and any breach of the contract may lead to legal consequences.

Lease Agreements

A lease is a legally binding arrangement where one party, known as the lessor, grants another party, known as the lessee, the right to use a permanent property for a specific period in exchange for periodic payments.

It is defined by Section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. The lessor is the property owner providing these rights, while the lessee receives them and pays rent or a premium for such use. To form a legitimate lease, both parties must have the capacity to enter into the agreement, meaning they must share a common interest in the lease, the lessor must have the legal authority to lease the property, and the lessee should be of legal age.

Understanding the Role of a Lessor

The lessor, as the legal owner of a property or asset, grants the lessee the right to use it for a specified duration while retaining ownership. The lessee makes periodic payments to the lessor based on their agreement, compensating for any losses incurred due to damage or misuse.

The lessor must authorize any asset sale and is entitled to any resulting financial gains. While the lessor's access to the asset is limited during the agreement, they may enter with the lessee's permission and must notify the lessee of maintenance.

In cases of damage or illegal activity by the lessee, the lessor can terminate the lease without notice. At the end of the contract, the property is returned to the lessor, with an option for the lessee to purchase it.

Lessee must deliver title to such additions after the tenancy ends. Right to Collect RentAuthorized to collect rent or agreed consideration from the tenant without interruption as per the contract terms.
